Call of Duty: Warzone Caldera, formerly known as the original Call of Duty: Warzone, is shutting down later this year so developers can focus on the battle royale's sequel and players are angry. The announcement came in a Call of Duty blog post titled "An update on Call of Duty: Warzone Caldera" published on June 22.

Players Angry That OG Call of Duty: Warzone Will Shut Down This Fall

Activision announced in June that it planned to end support for the game this month in order to focus on other Call of Duty content. Following Caldera's closure, players will be able to access their purchased content in Modern Warfare, Black Ops Cold War and Vanguard multiplayer modes.
